HUNTSVILLE
A PICTORIAL HISTORY by Dave and Sharon Dooling
To Mrs. Lucy Herman, Dave's sixth-grade teacher, who saw what he might become, and to our daughter, Holly Ann.
CONTENTS

Preface .................................................... V
Foreword ................................................ VI
Chapter 1 ............................................... 1
   from 300 to 1858
Chapter 2 ............................................... 23
   from 1859 to 1899
Chapter 3 .............................................. 79
   from 1900 to 1939
Chapter 4 ..............................................153
   from 1940 to 1949
Chapter 5 ..............................................161
   from 1950 to 1980
Huntsville's 175-year history has seen it grow from John Hunt's two-room log cabin near a natural spring to the modern-day "rocket city." Here is an important, entertaining and fascinating visual record of that evolution and growth. In over 300 carefully selected and captioned photographs, maps and illustrations, accompanied by a lively and informative text, the story of Huntsville is captured for all time. As James Record writes in his Foreword, "You will be reading a book that truly depicts a community... The feel of religion—of education—of industry—of culture—of recreation—of business—of pioneer life—of a government of the people—and many other aspects of the community has been captured, almost in story form, pictorially." Here is a drawing of Madison County's first courthouse (1811); the first cotton mill (1832); Big Spring Park in the 1850s; the Union occupation in 1862; the first church, high school, post office and Masonic Lodge; and much, much more. Huntsville: A Pictorial History will be a valuable research tool and a treasured collection for generations.

Dave Dooling has been covering the U. S. space program since 1970 when he started writing for Spaceflight magazine. He has been science writer and science editor of The Huntsville Times since February 1977. He holds the 1980 press award of the National Space Club and a writing award from the Aviation/Space Writers Association.

Sharon Dooling was a librarian at The Huntsville Times for eleven years and has lived in Huntsville since she was six months old. She has a long-standing interest in American history.